Eyes And Teeth.

If you try to analyze anything as fleeting and fugitive as a smile, you will find that much of its beauty depends on the shape of the eyes and the teeth. If these are beautiful, your smile is almost certain to be pleasing.

In spite of all of its intangible quality, a pretty smile can be cultivated. It is, of course, impossible to state exactly how you yourself can improve your smile, for that depends on the little tricks of expression which are your very own and which may or may not be a disadvantage to you. You must study your own smile before a mirror and see how it can be improved—that is, if it needs improvement.

However, this much I can say: so smile is attractive if the parting of the lips reveals nares or badly shaped teeth. Your teeth need not be small and milky white. That type was once considered the sole standard of beauty. Fairly large teeth, with a slight yellowish cast, denote strength and good health and are far from ugly. But whatever their shape or color, the teeth must not be covered with tartar and must not show their need of filling and general dental attention. A good dentist is, in fact, the first aid to a pretty smile.

As for the eyes, I have only one bit of advice to give: try not to squint them up too much when you smile. "Squinting" induces innumerable wrinkles around the corners of the eyes.

Bedtime Stories For The Little Ones

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE BLACK BRUSH.

By HOWARD R. HARRIS

"DEAR, dear, of all the things I don't like to do this is the worst!"

This is what Uncle Wiggily heard Nurse Jane Puffy Wuzzy saying one day as he poked his head out in the kitchen of his hollow stump bungalow where the muskrat lady was working.

"I hope Nurse Jane isn't saying she doesn't like to make cherry pie and pumpkin turnovers," said Uncle Wiggily to himself. "That would be too bad! I must see what it is she doesn't like to do."

So, making as little noise as he could, Uncle Wiggily looked around the edge of the kitchen door, and he saw Nurse Jane putting black polish on the stove. She dabbed on some black powder, mixed up with water, and then she rubbed it with a black brush.

"I certainly don't like to black the stove!" went on Miss Puffy Wuzzy, talking to herself, as she didn't know the bunny rabbit gentleman was near. "It makes my paws so much like the coal tin. But still I suppose it has to be done," and she gave a little oil daily as a means of gaining flesh.

Fan—You have been unusually successful in training your eyebrows. I so agree with you that pulling out such hairs on the eyebrows as spoil the shape of the arch, is a very good thing. I never like to advise women to pull out those which grow under the eyebrows and near the eye for fear that they will hurt themselves, but instead tell them to keep these hairs out and to use the tweezers on those which grow above the brow. Your suggestion about rubbing the skin with cold cream before pulling out the hairs to make them come more easily, is an excellent one.

P. K.—You are probably using too strong a soap on your face. Use an oil soap or else massage the skin with cold cream and then wash off the cream with soap and warm water.

long sigh like the air all coming out of an automobile tire on a hot day. Uncle Wiggily suddenly thought of something, as he hid himself behind the kitchen door. He twined his pink nose, whisked his right eye at his left eye, and then, tapping his red, white and blue striped stomach, crunched on top of his tail silk hat, he whispered:

"I'll do it!" Then Uncle Wiggily gave a loud "Ahem!" and patted his crutch on the floor, as if he were coming in from the front door. Then he pushed the kitchen door farther open.

"Oh, I didn't know you were home!" exclaimed Nurse Jane, turning around quickly from where she was blacking the stove.

"Oh, yes," said the rabbit gentleman, pretending he had just returned from "tapping over the woods and fields looking for an adventure." "Well, Nurse Jane, and if I were then I'd go right over to Mrs. Wibbly-wobble's, Nurse Jane."

"Oh, right over!" said Mrs. Wibbly-wobble, cried Miss Puffy Wuzzy. "Why, is anything the matter at the dock house?"

"I heard Jimmie quacking when I came past a little while ago," spoke the bunny. "And this was true. 'Marble the bunny' said, 'I don't like to stop Jimmie's pain.' Uncle Wiggily said on."

"Oh, it must be that Jimmie has the mumps real, this time," said Miss Puffy Wuzzy. "He didn't have them before, when his mother sent for me in a hurry. But maybe he has now. I'll go right over. Oh, I forgot! The stove is only half blacked!"

"Leave it until you come back!" spoke Uncle Wiggily.

"Well," said the muskrat lady. And when she had put a shawl over her head to go over to the Wibbly-wobble duck house, Uncle Wiggily danced around with his red, white and blue crutch and said:

"Ah, ha! That was a good way to get her out. Jimmie really was quacking away at a great rate, and maybe something is the matter. It's just as well for Nurse Jane to go see. But now I'll have a chance to finish blacking the stove for her. It isn't fair that she should have to do such black, ugly work. I must do my share."

Then, taking off his tail silk hat, so he wouldn't get it all splashed with whitewash, Uncle Wiggily rolled up his sleeves and took the black brush in his paws.

He was rubbing away at Nurse Jane's kitchen stove, and he had it nearly all polished. The bar, and he was thinking how pleased the muskrat lady would be when she came back when all at once, in through the window, which had been left open, jumped the bad old blue-nosed baboon.

At first the baboon seemed surprised at finding Uncle Wiggily in the kitchen blackening the stove.

Then a saucy smile came over the face of the bad chap, and, wrangling up his blue nose, he said:

"Oh! Oh! What I know about you, Uncle Wiggily! You have to black the stove! You have to black the stove! Oh! Oh! What I know about you!"

And the baboon poked his paw at the bunny, and made all sorts of faces of him.

"I'm blacking this stove because it isn't fair to make Nurse Jane do it all the while," said Uncle Wiggily. "And what do you want here, any how?"

"What do I want? Your soup, of course!" howled the Bab. "I'm going to get it, too!" he said, as he made a jump for the bunny.

"Going to get my soup, are you?" bravely shouted the rabbit gentleman. "Well, you're going to get some—"
